Amendments to the Constitution

SRI K. PATTABHIRAMAN (Kolar).—I want a clarification in respect of a matter which has just now come up but in some other form I am trying to raise the same question. The question of suggesting amendments to the Constitution has been hanging over as it were before the House from quite a long time. Various questions have been put on the floor of the House. I personally feel with a certain amount of regret that an attempt has been made to suggest that there is something confidential about these matters, but I am at a loss to understand or follow that reasoning. Latterly in the public press there have been suggestions made that in respect of certain important matters the State Government have already made their concrete proposals and they are before the
